Creator to Crown

In an age of waning biblical literacy and theological knowledge, Creator to Crown: A Christ-Centered Catechism by Adam McClendon and Chris Hulshof offers a vital educational tool. Building on Benjamin Keach's Catechism, McClendon and Hulshof update and reorder his questions and answers, crafting a resource designed to guide Christians into deeper communion with Christ. This catechism aims to move beyond mere memorization, equipping believers to truly understand, articulate, and embody their faith in a contemporary world.

Insights

- Catechisms have served as an essential means of promoting biblical literacy throughout church history. This catechism is intended to support the contemporary need for stronger biblical understanding among church members and seminarians alike.
- While other catechisms focus on the relationship between God and self, Creator to Crown focuses on God's redemptive plan throughout history.
- Primary audience: Protestant laypersons, especially in Baptistic settings
- Secondary audience: Christian schools looking for a theological supplement to their current curriculum.
