Katie J. McCoy Calls Women to See God's Law as Love in 'Forever for Our Good'

New Bible Study Connects Deuteronomy to Everyday Life

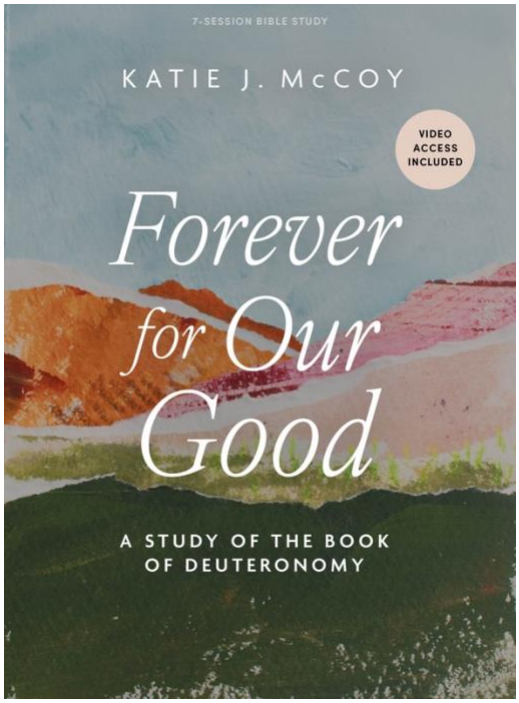
BRENTWOOD, Tenn., March 6, 2026—What comes to mind when you think of biblical law? For many, it feels like a list of rules that no longer apply or something to endure rather than embrace. But in "Forever for Our Good," author and theologian Katie J. McCoy invites women to see Old Testament law through a different lens: as an expression of God's covenant love and a pathway to life.



An exploration of the book of Deuteronomy, "Forever for Our Good" meets God's people at a moment of decision that would set the trajectory of their future. Standing on the edge of the promised land after years of wandering, Israel faced the same question believers face today: would they trust the Lord with wholehearted devotion, or turn elsewhere for security and meaning?

"At the core of Deuteronomy is God's covenant love," McCoy explains. "God sets His love on His people and calls them into an exclusive relationship with Himself. From that love flows His law—not as a burden, but as an invitation to respond in faithful obedience."

This seven-session Bible study from Lifeway Women reveals how God's commands reflect His eternal character—righteous, just, holy, merciful, truthful and loving—and how His law teaches His people what it looks like to love Him with all our heart, soul, mind and strength.

"Forever for Our Good" connects the truths of Deuteronomy to everyday life, demonstrating that when God's people submit to His ways, He works powerfully on their behalf—changing the trajectory of lives, breaking strongholds, and redeeming even the hardest seasons for good.
